

The Ministry of Justice has successfully restructured the probation landscape, but there is more to do to stabilise and improve the performance of Community Rehabilitation Companies (CRCs) and the National Probation Service (NPS).

奉誓

National Offender Management Service's (NOMS's) oversight of CRCs is robust but significantly lower levels of business, if translated into reduced income, would affect some CRCs' ability to transform.

The NPS is not yet operating as a truly national, sustainable service.

transformation plans.

Recommendations

- The Infrastructure and Projects Authority should ensure that its guidance to departments outsourcing complex transformed services considers how to mitigate or reduce risk and uncertainty from concurrent changes, including through different phasing.
- NOMS should combine its ongoing analysis of the CRC supply chain, with feedback from voluntary organisations, to identify and address gaps in provision in consultation with CRCs.
- NOMS needs deeper understanding of the financial and service viability of CRCs. It should focus its analysis on CRCs' capacity to sustain their transformation and service delivery plans.
- The NPS should expand its change programme.
- NOMS should map out the trajectory of its investment in contract management and how that will impact its CRC contract assurance functions.
- The Ministry should, as a matter of urgency, ensure data is available to support the contract and performance management of CRCs and the NPS.
- The Ministry should regularly review the composition of the fee for services to ensure that it incorporates and incentivises innovative approaches to reducing reoffending.
